The Reflection of the Gospel

Once the horror of their Master's death had faded in resurrection light, the once despondent disciples regather in the peaceful assurances of their Lord. His final instructions are given and he ascends and sits at the right hand of Almighty God. Far from being a finale, Jesus' short earthly ministry continues through and within the ministry of his faithful now gathered as a Church. This inaugural moment yet awaits completion with the descent of the Holy Spirit, the Paraclet ("Intercessor") who will recall to mind all that I have taught you. As with such events Mark leaves much to the imagination. Leaning heavily on Old (First) Testament language he emphasizes that the saving hand of God had worked these (recounted) deeds alone. Little did this motley group of bewildered disciples realize what lay ahead! The world they knew was certainly not waiting for their message. Their faith - soon to be tested by those evils characterized as the devil, deadly serpents and poisonous potions - would prevail through the assurances of such signs as speaking in tongues, healings and exorcisms. Yet, powers such as these have been conferred on us in Baptism uneasy as that might seem to many Christians! Let me paraphrase a startling passage in Mark that warrants close reflection: The Lord who continues to work through us is the One who confirms this message with signs that accompany us (Mark 16:20). In brief, we, who have been baptized and thus armed with Christ's power, are called into the world to proclaim his word with confidence. The mystery is that for a variety of reasons we do not claim this authority. Awed by the authority "of the ordained" or constrained by either indifference or lack of conviction we fall into compromise. Let the priests "do that"; how about lay ministers and "all those 'church' people who revel in such activities? With the drop in vocations, lay ministry maybe closer than we think. Let this feast of the Ascension be a reaffirmation and recommitment to the handing on of the "good news"; let us hand it on with the assurance of God's promise: I am with you always.

Study of the First Reading

Anticipation is a national disease. We Americans hate to wait; we want everything now! Yet, we spend more time and energy preparing to celebrate a major event than actually enjoying the event itself. The Christmas season clearly shows off our obsession with anticipation.

The first reading has an atmosphere of anticipation. The author of Luke's gospel and Acts (who we will refer by his traditional named "Luke") begins the history of the early Church with a note to Theophilus [1]. The first book, the gospel of Luke, put a light on Jesus and his mission. Now, the Church becomes the focus. Like a good writer, Luke drops hints to answer his friend's question: "What will happen next?"

Who is this "Theophilus?" We do not know who he was, or if this person even existed. The word Theophilus means "friend of God." It is a proper name; it can be a nick name or title. Because it could mean different things in different contexts, Luke could have been writing to a person or a group of people. Luke could have even been addressing the reader. You or I could be the "friend of God" to whom Luke writes.

To build up the anticipation, Luke summarizes the life of Jesus [3] and then adds the promise of the Spirit [4-5]. The disciples, however, are not satisfied with this answer. They still want to know when Jesus will return as Messiah [6]. Do they wait for the right event? Luke says, "No." The day and time, even the timing, are reserved for God the Father [7]. "Do not wait for things to be done for you," Luke seems to say. "Wait instead for God's Spirit, so God will give you the power to do it for yourself [8]."

As Jesus speaks, he disappears from view [9]. But, the disciples still don't get it. They stand there and wait for Jesus' return [10]. Yes, he will return, but don't waste your life in passive anticipation. There is work to be done! And God will send his Spirit to work through us, so we can continue the mission Jesus began.
